

ANTARCTICA
LAND CLAIMS

- Year-round science station

Antarctica and the Southern Ocean are designated international territory by the 1960 Antarctic Treaty. Before the treaty, seven countries made claims in the region. They suspended these claims when they signed the treaty. The United States and Russia have reserved the right to make their own claims if the present international system ends.